Infrastructure in the 2030 Development Agenda – Highlights from Business for 2030

Infrastructure in many forms is critical to laying a foundation for sustainable development. Because infrastructure so often implicates core duties of the state, the stakes are even higher than usual to achieve results in a cost-effective manner. This raises the bar for how national governments work with the private sector, including the critical need for more comprehensive strategic planning at the national level that involves all stakeholders. This panel will consider these challenges as well as touch upon what might be different in the 2030 era than the last 15 years.

- Energy & Transport: Tam Nguyen, Global Head of Sustainability, Bechtel
- ICT: Angela Baker, Senior Manager – Wireless Reach, Qualcomm
- Health: Terri Bresenham, CEO of Sustainable Health Solutions for GE Healthcare
- Finance: Mike Eckhart, Managing Director, Global Head of Environmental Finance and Sustainability, Citi

Moderated by: George Ingram, Senior Fellow, Global Economy and Development, Brookings Institution
